2030 agenda for sustainable development on 1st January 2016 the 17 sustainable development goals (SDGs) of the agenda officially came into force. These goals cover the three dimensions of sustainable development: economic growth, social inclusion, and environmental protection. The encyclopedia of the UN Sustainable Development Goals comprehensively addresses the SDGs in an integrated way. It encompasses 17 volumes, each one devoted to one of the 17 SDGs. This volume is dedicated to SDG 14: Conserve and sustainably use the oceans, seas and marine resources for sustainable development. Marine and coastal bio-resources play an essential role in human well-being and social and economic development. This volume addresses this sustainability challenge, providing the description of a range of terms which allows a better understanding and fosters knowledge about it. Concretely, the defined targets are to prevent and significantly reduce marine pollution of all kinds, in particular from land-based activities, including marine debris and nutrient pollution; sustainably manage and protect marine and coastal ecosystems to avoid significant adverse impacts, including by strengthening their resilience and take action for their restoration in order to achieve healthy and productive oceans; minimize and address the impacts of ocean acidification, including through enhanced scientific cooperation at all levels; effectively regulate harvesting and end overfishing, illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing and destructive fishing practices and implement science-based management plans in order to restore fish stocks in the shortest time feasible at least to levels that can produce maximum sustainable yield as determined by their biological characteristics; conserve at least 10 per cent of coastal and marine areas, consistent with national and international law and based on the best available scientific information; prohibit certain forms of fisheries subsidies which contribute to overcapacity and overfishing; eliminate subsidies that contribute to illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing and refrain from introducing new such subsidies, recognizing that appropriate and effective special and differential treatment for developing and least developed countries should be an integral part of the World Trade Organization fisheries subsidies negotiation; increase the economic benefits to small island developing states and least developed countries from the sustainable use of marine resources, including through sustainable management of fisheries, aquaculture and tourism; increase scientific knowledge, develop research capacity and transfer marine technology, taking into account the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission criteria and guidelines on the transfer of marine technology in order to improve ocean health and to enhance the contribution of marine biodiversity to the development of developing countries, in particular small island developing states and least developed countries; provide access for small-scale artisanal fishers to marine resources and markets; enhance the conservation and sustainable use of oceans and their resources by implementing international law as reflected in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which provides the legal framework for the conservation and sustainable use of oceans and their resources, as recalled in paragraph 158 of the future we want.

The Flush of Concern: Understanding and Managing Facial Plethora

Have you ever noticed a persistent redness or flushing across your face, seemingly unrelated to exertion or environmental factors? This persistent redness, medically termed facial plethora, can be a subtle yet significant concern for many. While not always a serious medical condition, facial plethora can significantly impact self-esteem and, depending on the underlying cause, may indicate a more profound health issue. This article aims to provide a comprehensive understanding of facial plethora, exploring its causes, symptoms, diagnosis, and effective management strategies.

Understanding Facial Plethora: What is it, and What Causes it? Facial plethora, often described as a "ruddy complexion," is characterized by a persistent redness or flushing of the face. The intensity of the redness can vary, ranging from a mild blush to a pronounced, intense redness. Unlike transient blushing, which is triggered by emotional responses or temperature changes, facial plethora is usually more persistent and often lacks a clear trigger. The underlying cause of facial plethora is diverse and complex. It can be a symptom of various conditions, ranging from benign to serious. These causes broadly fall into several categories:

Vascular Conditions: These conditions affect the blood vessels in the face, leading to increased blood flow and visible redness. Examples include rosacea, spider angiomas (telangiectasias), and certain types of lupus. Rosacea, for instance, is a chronic inflammatory skin condition characterized by persistent facial redness, flushing, and sometimes pustules or papules.

Systemic Diseases: Certain systemic illnesses can manifest as facial plethora. Polycythemia vera, a rare blood cancer characterized by an overproduction of red blood cells, often presents with a ruddy complexion. Similarly, other conditions like hypertension (high blood pressure), liver disease (especially cirrhosis), and certain endocrine disorders can lead to facial plethora. For example, a patient with Cushing's syndrome might experience facial plethora due to the increased cortisol levels.

Medication Side Effects: Some medications, particularly corticosteroids (like prednisone) and certain immunosuppressants, can cause facial plethora as a side effect.

Environmental Factors: While less common as the primary cause, prolonged sun exposure, hot environments, or alcohol consumption can contribute to facial plethora.

Recognizing the Symptoms and Seeking Diagnosis Identifying facial plethora is typically straightforward – it's the persistent redness of the face. However, the key to effective management lies in pinpointing the underlying cause. This requires a thorough medical evaluation. Symptoms to note, in addition to the facial redness, include:

Burning or stinging sensations on the face: Common in rosacea.

Visible blood vessels (telangiectasias): Often seen in rosacea and other vascular conditions. Pustules or papules: Characteristic of rosacea. Swelling: Can be present in some conditions, including rosacea and lupus. Headache, dizziness, or shortness of breath: Suggesting a more serious underlying condition like polycythemia vera. Diagnosis involves a physical examination, a review of medical history (including medication use), and potentially blood tests to assess blood cell counts, liver function, and hormone levels. Imaging studies like ultrasound might be necessary in specific cases. A dermatologist can play a critical role in differentiating between various causes, especially skin conditions like rosacea.

Treatment and Management Strategies for Facial Plethora

Treatment for facial plethora depends heavily on the underlying cause. There's no one-size-fits-all approach.

Treating Underlying Conditions:

Addressing the root cause is paramount. If the plethora is due to rosacea, topical treatments like azelaic acid or metronidazole might be prescribed. If polycythemia vera is the cause, specialized hematological treatment is necessary. Managing hypertension or liver disease requires specific interventions for those conditions.

Lifestyle Modifications:

In some cases, lifestyle changes can help manage facial plethora. Limiting sun exposure, avoiding alcohol, and managing stress can be beneficial, particularly if environmental factors or rosacea are involved.

Topical Treatments:

For redness and inflammation, topical creams containing corticosteroids or other anti-inflammatory agents might be prescribed, but only under the guidance of a dermatologist. Avoid self-treating.

Cosmetic Measures:

Camouflage make-up can help conceal redness for those seeking immediate cosmetic improvement.

Real-World Example:

Consider Sarah, a 45-year-old woman experiencing persistent facial redness. After consulting a dermatologist, she was diagnosed with rosacea. Her treatment involved topical azelaic acid, avoiding harsh skincare products, and managing stress through regular yoga. Her facial redness significantly improved with this combined approach.

Conclusion

Facial plethora, while often visually noticeable, requires a thorough medical evaluation to determine the underlying cause. The treatment plan varies significantly depending on the diagnosis, ranging from lifestyle adjustments to specialized medical interventions. Seeking professional medical help is crucial for accurate diagnosis and effective management. Early intervention is key to preventing complications and improving quality of life.

FAQs:

1. Is facial plethora always a sign of a serious medical condition? No, facial plethora can be caused by benign conditions like rosacea or even environmental factors. However, it can also be a symptom of more serious systemic diseases. A medical evaluation is crucial to determine the underlying cause.
2. Can facial plethora be cured? The curability of facial plethora depends entirely on the underlying cause. Some conditions, like rosacea, can be managed effectively, but not necessarily cured. Others, like polycythemia vera, require ongoing medical management.
3. What are the potential long-term complications of untreated facial plethora? The long-term complications depend on the underlying cause. Untreated rosacea can lead to permanent skin damage, while untreated polycythemia vera can have life-threatening consequences.
4. Can stress exacerbate facial plethora? Yes, stress can trigger or worsen facial plethora, particularly in conditions like rosacea. Stress management techniques can be a valuable part of the management plan. 5. Are there any home remedies for facial plethora? While some home remedies might provide temporary relief from redness (like cool compresses), they shouldn't replace medical advice. It's essential to consult a doctor for diagnosis and treatment to address the underlying cause.
